One of the coal cars in a freight train yesterday evening on the C. & O. slipped one of its chains which holds the doors in the bottom of the car closed.
The contents of the car were scattered along the track some distance west of Commerce street. The people made good use of the coal as soon as the train had passed. Nearly all people in the vicinity got a good supply of the black diamonds.

INSURANCE

Twenty-five years ago we paid 75c. per $100 on a frame building with five coal stoves in different parts of the building. Today on same site, $260 per $100 on building now of brick and metal, one flue, and heated by steam. Then the city had a volunteer fire department and now a fine up to date paid system and yet look at the increase.

Looking at the changes in our own business every department is from 25 cents to 100 per cent. better and cheaper. Why is Kentucky's insurance rate higher than any State in the union and 4 per cent. higher than the average for the entire United States and territories.

Former Maysville Girl

Last evening at Wellsburg on the C. & O. while Mrs. Sylvester F. Reed, a former Maysville girl and wife of night operator Reed at the Wellsburg depot, was preparing supper, a coal oil stove exploded, the house and contents destroyed and Mrs. Reed and her 3-year-old child burned to death.
Mrs. Reed was carried from the building but died in a few moments.
The child perished in the house. Mr.

SOME SPELLING BEE

Great Crowd at Forest Avenue School Building Enjoyed The Fun—
Prizes Awarded.

Last night was the big night, and as we told you the crowd was there at the "Spelling Bee."

It was a regular old-fashioned good time.
The "old folks" were school boys and girls once more.
Among the "old folks," Mrs. Dr.
Moody and Mrs. John C. Everett, were the last on the floor, Mrs. John C.
Everett was the last to leave the floor.
It was in evidence that the spelling book had been studied.

It is a pity we can not have more of these entertainments. Everybody felt glad to be there. A most little sum was realized at the door, which will be used for the improvement of the school grounds.

Now let the committee give the public another program of the same order and we will enjoy it. It beats "progressive euchre" and all other games.
The little folks get in on this, so let us plan for all young and old alike for the next affair.

Following were the prize winners:
FIRST PRIZE—
Georgia Carrigan, Fourth Grade, Sixth Ward School.
SECOND PRIZE—
Nan Chenault, Fifth Grade, Forest Avenue School.
THIRD PRIZE—
William Smith, Sixth Grade, High School.
FOURTH PRIZE—

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Yesterday evening at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Verner Dryden, on Commerce street, little Miss Elizabeth Dryden celebrated her eighth birthday.

Her school mates and friends were in to spend the evening and a delightful supper with a birthday cake with its eight candles was the centerpiece.

CONVICT LABOR AND TAXATION MEASURES

Passed By Senate—Constitutional Amendment Providing for Working of Prisoners on Roads Is Adopted, 25 to 2.

Frankfort, Ky., February 27.—Senator Booles called for the orders of the day Senate Bill 54 and Senate Bill 238.
These bills are constitutional amendments providing for the classification of property and working convicts on the public roads, bridges and State farms.
They were both passed.

They are the same measures that were voted on by the voters at the election in 1913 and carried by 50,000 majority.
There was little or no opposition to the measure providing for an amendment to the constitution to classify property for taxation. Senator Seiden L. Glenn spoke against the bill. It passed 25 to 1.

The constitutional amendment providing for the working of convicts on the public roads passed 25 to 2. Senator Salmon voted against the bill.

SYNOPSIS.

Francois Beaupre, a pennant babe of three years, after an amusing incident in which Marshal New figures, is made a Chevalier of France by the Emperor Napoleon, who proclaims that the boy might one day be a marshal of France under another Bonaparte. At the age of ten Francois visits General Baron Gaspard Gourgaud, who with Allice, his seven-year-old daughter, lives at the Chateau. A soldier of the Empire under Napoleon, he fires the boy's imagination with stories of his campaigns. The general offers Francois a home at the Chateau. The boy refuses to leave his parents, but in the end becomes a copyist for the general and learns of the friendship between the general and Marquis Zappi, who campaigned with the general under Napoleon. Marquis Zappi and his son, Pietro, arrive at the Chateau. The general agrees to care for the Marquis's son while the former goes to America. The Marquis before leaving for America asked Francois to be a friend of his son. The boy solemnly promises. Francois goes to the Chateau to live. Marquis Zappi dies leaving Pietro as a ward of the general. Allice, Pietro and Francois meet a strange boy who proves to be Prince Louis Napoleon. Francois saves his life. The general discovers Francois loves Allice, and extracts a promise from him that he will not interfere between the girl and Pietro. Francois goes to Italy as secretary to Pietro. Queen Hortense plans the escape of her son Louis Napoleon by disguising him and Marquis Zappi as her lackeys. Francois takes Marquis Zappi's place, who is ill. In the escape of Hortense and Louis, dressed as Louis's brother Francois lures the Austrians from the hotel, allowing the prince and his mother to escape. Francois is a prisoner of the Austrians for five years in the Tyrol. He escapes and goes to Italy. He discovers in his guard one of Pietro's old family servants.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued.

A person of more importance than Battista had fallen under the spell of Francois's personality. The governor himself had been attracted by the young Frenchman. The governor, Count von Gersdorf, was a vain, discontented, brilliant Austrian, at odds with the world because he had not risen further in it. He was without society in this mountain fortress of his, and longed for it; he had a fine voice and no one to sing to; he liked to talk and had no one to talk to. Francois, with his ready friendliness, with his gift of flattery good in every one, with his winning manner and simplicity which bled the ease of sophistication, was a treasure-trove of amusement to the bored Austrian.

Things stood so with the prisoner at the time of the discovery of the identity of his jailer and of his jail. The governor at that time was away on a visit to Vienna, looking for a promotion; he came back elated and good-humored in the prospect of a change within the year. But the heart of Francois sank as he thought what the change might mean to him.

"Some day a marshal of France under another Bonaparte," he said to himself one day, staring through the bars at his window—he called the sky so. He smiled. "But that is nothing. To help place my prince on the throne of France—that is my work—my life." He talked aloud at times, as prisoners come to do. He went on then, in a low voice.

"If there were good fairies, if I had three wishes: Allice—the prince made emperor—Francois Beaupre, a marshal of France." He laughed happily. "It is child's play. Nothing matters except that my life shall do its work. Even that is so small; but I have a great desire to do that. I believe I shall do that—I know it." And he fell to work on a book which he was planning, chapter by chapter, in his brain.

But, if he were to escape ever, the chance was increased infinitely by the going back and forth to the governor's room. A new governor might keep him shut up absolutely. It had been so while the count was away; then he had been ill, and the lieutenant in command would not let a doctor see him till he became delirious; that was the ordinary treatment of prisoners. Francois, thinking over these things on a day, fell with a sudden accent on the steady push of his longing for freedom, the conviction that he must get free before the count left, else opportunity and force for the effort would both be gone forever. And on that day Battista brought in his midday meal with a look and a manner which Francois remarked.

"What is it, Battista?" he asked softly.

The man answered not a word, but turned and opened the door rapidly and looked out. "I thought I had left the water-pitcher. Ah, here it is—I am stupid," he spoke aloud. And then, finger on lip dramatically, he bent over the young man. "My son—the little Battista—has had a letter. The young master wishes him to come to him in France, to serve him. He is going in two days."

It was whispered quickly, and Battista stood erect.

"The signor's foot will get cold if the signor does not eat it," he spoke softly. "I do not like to carry good food for prisoners who do not appreciate it; bring less tomorrow," he said, hardly hearing the surly tones, had his hand on Battista's arm, was whispering back eagerly.

"Where does he go, in France?"

"To Viqueux," the low answer came. Francois sank back, tortured.

Going to Viqueux, the little Battista! From Castlefort! And he, Francois, must stay here in prison! His soul was wrung with a sudden wild homesickness. He wanted to see Allice, to see his mother, to see the general; to see the peaceful little village and the stream that ran through it, and the steep-arched bridge, and the poppy fields, and the corn! The gray castle with its red roofs, and the beech wood, and the dim, half-walled library, how he wanted to see it all! How his heart ached, madly, fiercely! This was the worst moment of all his captivity. And with that, Battista was over him, was murmuring words again. Something was slipped under the bedclothes.

"Paper—pens. The signor will write a letter this afternoon. And tomorrow little Battista will take it."

And the heart of Francois gave a sudden throb of joy as wild as its anguish. He could speak to them before he died; it might be they could save him. His hands stole to the package under the coarse blanket. It seemed as if in touching it he touched his mother and his sweetheart and his home.

CHAPTER XV.

Good News.

In the garden of the chateau of Viqueux, where the stiff, gray stone vases spilled again their heart's blood of scarlet and echin of vines; where the two stately lines of them led down to the sundial and the round lawn—on one of the griffin-supported stone seats Allice and Pietro sat, where Allice and Francois had sat five years before.

As they sat in the garden, they had been going over the pros and cons of his life or death for the thousandth time. Pietro's quiet gray eyes were set as he looked away from Allice and across the lawn to the beech wood.

"God knows I would give my life quickly if I could see him coming through the trees there, as we used to see him, mornings long ago, in his patched homespun clothes."

Allice followed the glance considerably, as if calling up the little, brown, trudging figure so well remembered. Then she tossed up her head sharply. "Who?" and then she laughed. "I shall be seeing visions next, like Francois," she said. "I thought it was he—back in the beech wood."

"I see no one," Pietro stared.

"But you have no eyes, Pietro—I can always see a thing two minutes before you," Allice threw at him. "There—the man."

"Oh," said Pietro. "Your eyes are more than natural, Allice. You see into a wood; that is uncanny. Yes, I see him now. Mon dieu! he is a high fellow."

"A peasant—from some other village," Allice spoke carelessly. "I do not know him," and they went on talking, as they had been doing, of Francois.

And with that, there was Jean Philippe Molson, forty now and fat, but still beautiful in purple millinery, advancing down the stone steps between the tall gray vases, making a symphony of color with the rich red of the flowers. He held a silver tray; a letter was on it.

"For mademoiselle!"

Mademoiselle took it calmly and glanced at it, and with that both the form and the Marquis Zappi were astonished to see her fall to shivering, as if in a sudden illness. She caught Pietro's arm. The letter was clutched in her other hand thrust back of her.

"What is it, Allice?" His voice was quiet as ever, but his hand was around her shaking fingers, and he held them strongly. "What is it, Allice?"

She drew forward the other hand; the letter shook, rustled with her trembling. "It is—from Francois!"

Jean Philippe Molson baving stayed to listen, as he ought not, lifted his eyes and his hands to heaven and gave thanks in a general way, volubly, unrebuked. By now the steady fingers of Allice had opened the paper, and her head and Pietro's were bent over it, devouring the well-known writing. Allice, excited, French, exploded into a disjointed running comment.

"From prison—our Francois—dear Francois!" And then, "Five years, Pietro! Think—while we have been free!" And then, with a swift clutch again at the big coat sleeve crowding against her: "Pietro! See, the date—it is only two months ago. He was alive then; he must be alive now; he is! I know it, Pietro! A woman knows more things than a man."

With that she threw up her head and fixed Jean Philippe, drinking in all this, with an unexpected stern glance. "What are you doing here, Molson? What manners are these?" Then, relapsing in a flash into pure human trust and affection toward the anxious old servant: "My dear, old, good Molson—be alive—Monsieur Francois is alive—in a horrible prison in Italy! But he is alive, Molson!" And with that, a sudden jump again into dignity. "Who brought this, Molson?"

Jean Philippe was only too happy to have a hand in the joyful excitement. "Mademoiselle, the young person speaks little language. But he told me to say to monsieur the marquis that he was the little Battista."

Pietro looked up quickly. "Allice, it is the servant from my old home of whom I spoke to you. I can not imagine how Francois got hold of him, but he chose a good messenger. May I have him brought here? He must have something to tell us."

"Father—good news—the best news—almost the best! Father, be ready for the good news!"

"I am ready," the general growled impatiently. "What is this, foolery?"

Allice, her letter in her hands, struggled in her mind. Then: "The letter will keep—yes, let him come, and we can read it all the better after for what he may tell us."

So Molson, having orders to produce at once the said little Battista, retired, much excited, and returned shortly—but not so shortly as to have omitted a fling of the great news into the midst of the servants' hall. He conducted, marching behind him, the little Battista, an enormous young man of six feet four, erect, grave, stately. This dignified person, saluting the lady with a deep bow, dropped on one knee before his master, his eyes full of a worshiping joy, and kissed his hand. Having done which, he arose silently and stood waiting, with those beaming eyes feasting on Pietro's face, but otherwise decorous.

First the young marquis said some friendly words of his great pleasure in seeing his old servant and the friend of his childhood, and the big man stood with downcast eyes, with the color flushing his happy face. Then, "Battista," asked the marquis, "how did you get the letter which you brought mademoiselle?"

"You Must Save Him!"

"My father," answered Battista laconically.

"How did your father get it?"

"From the signor prisoner, my signor."

Allice and Pietro looked at him at last, not comprehending by what means this was possible. Pietro, remembering the little Battista of old, vaguely remembered that he was incapable of initiative in speech. One must pump him painfully.

"Was your father in the prison where the signor is confined?" Allice asked.

The little Battista turned his eyes on her a second, approvingly, but briefly. They went back without delay to their affair of devouring the face of his master. But he answered promptly. "Yes, signorina; he is there always."

"Always?" Pietro demanded in alarm. "Is Battista a prisoner?"

"But no, my signor."

"What then? Battista, try to tell us."

So adjured, little Battista made a violent effort. "He is one of the jailers, my signor."

"Jailers? For the Austrians?" The face of the marquis took all the joyful light out of the face of little Battista.

"My signor," he stammered, "it could not be helped. He was there. He knew the castle. They forced him in at first, and—and it came to be so."

"Knew the castle?" Pietro repeated.

"What castle?"

Battista's eyes turned to his Master's like those of a faithful dog, trusting but not understanding. "What castle, my signor? Castlefort—the signor's own castle—what other?"

A sharp exclamation from Allice summed up everything. "Your castle is confiscated; they use it as a prison. Francois is a prisoner there, Pietro! All these years—in your own home!"

"I never dreamed of that," Pietro spoke, thinking aloud. "Every other prison in Austria and Italy I have tried to find him in. I never dreamed of Castlefort."

At the end of the interview the little Battista put his hand into his breast pocket and brought out another letter, thickly folded. Would mademoiselle have him instructed where to find the mother of the signor prisoner? He had promised to put this into her own hands. He must do it before he touched food.

And Jean Philippe Molson, who had lurked discreetly back of the nearest stone vase, not missing a syllable, was given orders, and the huge little Battista was sent off up the stone steps between the scarlet flowers, up the velvet slope of lawn, in charge of the purple one.

Half an hour later the general, walked up from the village, walked slowly, thoughtfully through the beech wood, his face hardly older than when he had come to Viqueux, but sterner and sadder; his still soldierly gait less buoyant than it had been five years ago.

He saw Allice and Pietro coming joyfully toward him, running lightly, heartily, calling to him with excited joy voices. It stabbed the general's heart; a quick thought came of that other who had been always with them, now dead or worse, of that other whom these two had forgotten. And with that they were upon him, and Allice was kissing him, hugging him, pushing a letter into his hand, up his sleeve, into his face—anywhere.

"Father—good news—the best news—almost the best! Father, be ready for the good news!"

"I am ready," the general growled impatiently. "What is this, foolery?"

Sabre de bois! What is your news, then, you silly child?"

And Allice, shaking very much, laid her hand on his cheek and looked earnestly into his eyes. "Father, Francois is alive!"

For all his gruff self-control the general made the letter an excuse shortly to sit down. Queer, that a man's knees should suddenly bend and give way because of a thrill of rapture in a man's psychological make-up! But the general had to sit down. And then there all that had been extracted from little Battista was rehearsed, and the letter read over from start to finish.

"But he is alive, father! Alive! That is happiness enough to kill one. I never knew till now that I feared he was dead."

"Alive—yes! But in prison—in that devil's hole of an old castle!" And Allice looked at Pietro and laughed, but the general paid no attention. "He must be got out. There is no time to waste. Diabolical! He is perishing in that vile stable! What was that the lad said about the doctor's speech, that only a long sea voyage could save him? One must get him out, mon dieu, quick!"

Allice, her hand on his arm, put her head down on it suddenly and stood so for a moment, her face hidden. Pietro, his hands thrust deep in his pockets, looked at the general with wide gray eyes, considering. With that Allice flashed up, turned on the young Italian, shaking her forefinger at him; her eyes shone blue fire.

"That is for you, Pietro. If we should lose him now, just as we have found him! Now is the time for you to show if you can be what is brave and strong, as Francois has shown. It is your castle; you must save him."

Pietro looked at the girl, and the color crept through his cheeks, but he said nothing.

"Allice, my Allice," her father put an arm around her. "One may not demand heroism as if it were bread and butter. Pietro will not fail us."

"Allice always believed me to be brilliant like Francois," Pietro spoke gently. "But I never could."

"Yet, Pietro, it is indeed your time," Allice threw at him eagerly. "Francois must be rescued or he will die."

"Yes," Pietro answered quietly. "Francois must be rescued."

He was silent a moment, as if thinking. His calm poised mind was working swiftly; one saw the inner action in the clear gray eyes. The general and Allice, watching him, saw it.

"I think I know how," he said.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Stone Staircase.

Battista's prisoner stood at the barred window high up the steep side of the castle and stared out wistfully at the receding infinity of blues—his meadow. In the three months since his letter had gone to France, he had grown old. The juices of his youth seemed dried up; his eyes were bloodshot, his skin yellow; there was no flesh on him. The waiting and hoping had worn on him more than the dead level of the hopeless years before. There was a new tenseness in the lightly-built figure, even in the long, delicate, strong fingers. The prisoner had caught a whiff of the air of home and was choking for a full breath.

"You are not well, my friend," said the governor. "The doctor must see you."

But Francois refused lightly and laughed and fell to singing an old peasant song of France which he had remembered lately; he got up on the table and danced to an imaginary figure which he pretended to play after the manner of old Jacques Arrie, who played for dances in Viqueux. And the governor was taken with a violent fancy for it. He roared at it, and sang it over in fragments till he had learned it, and then he sang it and roared again and slapped his knee; there was a droll comedy in Francois's rendering also, not to be explained—and the count said that Francois must come to his rooms the next night for dinner and sing him the song again and also listen to a new one of his own.

So Francois was taken down the stone staircase and conducted to the two rooms which were the governor's suite. He knew them well, for he had dined many times with the count. But tonight he was left alone a few moments in the outer room, the living-room, while the governor was in the bedroom, and he looked about keenly with a strained attention which grew out of the suppressed hope of escape. Who knew what bit of knowledge of the castle might be vital, and who knew how soon? He noted the swords and pistols hanging on the wall, and marked a light saber whose scabbard was brightly polished as if the blade also were kept in good order. On the table he saw the flint and steel with which Count von Gersdorf lighted his pipe; he stepped to the window and bent out, scanning the wall. A stone coping, wide enough for a man's foot, but little more, ran, four feet below, ten feet beyond the window it ended in the roof of a shed, a sloping roof where a man could drop down, yes, or even climb up with ease. A man, that is, who had climbed when a boy as Francois had climbed—like a cat for certainty and lightness. But what then, when one was in the courtyard? It was walked about with a stone wall sixteen feet high; these old ancestors of Pietro, who had built this place, had planned well to keep Pietro's friend in prison.

So Francois, not hopeful of a sortie by that point, drew in his head from the open window and took to examining the walls of the governor's room. There were three doors—one from the hall by which he had come, one behind which he now heard the count moving in his bedroom, and a third. The count had gone through this last door one night a month before, into a dark, winding, stone staircase, and brought up a bottle of wonderful wine.

"A fine stock they put down there—the Italians who ruled here for eight hundred-odd years," he had said, "I've lowered it a bit. A good spiculous wine-cellar and grand old wine. You will be the better for a little." And Francois had watched him as he put the brass key back on the chain which hung from his belt.

At this point of memory the bedroom door opened, and the governor came out, in great good humor and ready to eat and drink as became an Austrian soldier. The dinner was brought in, but Francois, for all his efforts to do his part, could not swallow food, or very little. The fever, the unrest burning in him, made it impossible. Count Gersdorf looked at him seriously when dinner was over; as yet Francois, talking, laughing, singing, had eaten not over half a dozen mouthfuls.

"Certainly you are not well," he said. "I think the doctor should see you."

And then he nodded his head and his small eyes gleamed with a brilliant thought. "I know a medicine better than a doctor's." He stood up and his fingers were working at the chain of keys at his belt. Francois watched them and saw the thin, old, brass key which he slipped off. "A bottle of wine of our Italian ancestors—yours and mine, Beaupre—the count chuckled—"that will cure you of your ills for this evening at least." He slid the key into the lock and said, half to himself, "My little brass friend covers the belt of Albrecht von Gersdorf except to do him a pleasure, bless him!" And then, "Hold the candle, Beaupre—well, come along down—it can do no harm and I can't manage a light and two bottles."

So Francois followed down the twist of the stone staircase and found himself, after rather a long descent, holding the lamp high, gazing curiously about the walls of a large stone room lined with shelves, filled with bottles.

"A show, isn't it?" the Count von Gersdorf demanded. "Here, hold the light on this side," and he went on talking. "The wine is so old that I think it must have been stocked before the time of the last lord of the castle."

And Francois, bolder the light, remembering the Marquis Zappi, thought so too. The count pointed to a square stone in the wall which projected slightly, very slightly.

"That is the door to a secret stock of some sort, I have always thought," he said. "Probably some wonderful old stuff saved for the coming of age of the heir, or a great event of that sort. I wish I could get at it," and he stared wistfully at the massive block. "But I cannot stir it. And I don't let anyone but myself down here—not I."

The count turned away and they mounted the two stories of narrow steps, for the governor's rooms were on the second floor, and the staircase ran from it between walls, down underground. "The old chaps must have thought a lot of their wine to have the cellar connect directly with their own rooms—for Battista tells me these were always the rooms of the Za—of the lords of the castle," the governor explained.

And to Francois, considering it, the fact seemed an odd one. And then the governor set to work drinking Pietro's wine, and little thought, as he urged it on his prisoner, how much more right to it the prisoner had than he. It was a wonderful old liquid, full of a strange dim sparkle, and of most exquisite bouquet. As he drank it Francois silently toasted its owner on his return to his own again. He took so little as to disgust the governor, but it put fresh life into him, and when at last he could leave the count, who was by that time more than fairly drunk, he went up to his cold prison under the roof quieter and more at peace than he had been for months.

CHAPTER XVII.

A Loaf of Bread.

The next morning Battista came in with a manner which to the observing eye of his prisoner foretold distinctly some event. He talked more than usual, and more gruffly and loudly, but at last, after wandering about the room some minutes, all the time talking, scolding, he swooped on Francois

BOTH PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Items of More or Less Interest That Concern the Doings of the "Best Families."

The engagement is announced of Miss Tuffe Show, daughter of Mrs. Hoadley Show, to Mr. William Martingale Yuccles, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Worsen Yuccles.

Mr. Worsen Yuccles, by the way, comes of a good old family. They have always been fashionable. His uncle, G. How-Worsen Yuccles, is an intellectual man, having written the society notes for a fashion paper nearly a whole season. And his son, Martingale, once took a prize at a horse show.

It is rumored that Miss Tootoo Kynling has broken her engagement to Mr. Dedleigh Hior. But Dedleigh seemed quite cheerful last Saturday at his club.

It is whispered that the F. Spending-Spendars are not so happy together as they might be. Our readers will remember that Mrs. Spendar was the charming Miss Frecks, a noted belle of Boston. Mr. Spendar's more than attentive to Mrs. Jimmy Overland, while Mrs. Spendar is constantly seen with the young duke of Horro and Keapo. He comes of an ancient family. A greater part of this last season he was a visitor at Koopon Cliffs, the summer home of the F. Spending-Spendars.

and thrust a thick paper into his coat and at the same instant his heavy left hand was over Francois's mouth.

"Not a word," he whispered, and then—"The loaf of bread."

Francois, struck dumb and blind, turned hot and cold, and his shaking hand in his coat pocket clutched the letter.

But Battista prodded him with his hard forefinger. "Be careful," he muttered, and then again, "The bread—with a sharp prod—"The loaf of bread"—and the door had clanged. Battista was gone.

A strong man, who had not been shut away from life, would likely have read the letter instantly, would instantly have examined the long round loaf lying before him. Francois was ill and weak and it was the first word for five years from his own people which lay in his hand; he sat as it turned to stone, touching the paper as if that were enough; he sat perhaps fifteen minutes.

Then suddenly a breathlessness came over him that something might happen before he could read it—this writing which, whatever it should say, meant life and death to him. Taking care not to rustle the paper, deadening the sound under his bedclothes, he read it, kneeling by the bed. It was four letters—from his mother and Allice and the general and Pietro; but the first three were short. He felt, indeed, reading them, that no words had been written, that only the arms of the people he loved had strained about him and their faces laid against his, and that so, wordlessly, they had told him but one thing—their undying love. Weak, lonely, his intense temperament stretched to the breaking point by the last three months of fearful hope, it was more than he could bear. He put the papers against his cheek and his head dropped on the bed, and a storm of tears tore his soul and body. But it was dangerous; he must not be off his guard; he remembered that swiftly, and with shaking fingers he opened Pietro's letter—Pietro's letter which, yellowed and faded but distinct yet, in the small clear writing, is guarded today with those other letters in the mahogany desk in Vienna.

"My dear brother Francois," the letter began, and quick tears came again at that word "brother," which said so much. "My dear brother Francois, this is not to tell you how I have searched for you and never forgotten you. I will tell you that when I see you. This is to tell you how to get out of that house of mine which has held you as a prisoner when you ought to have been its welcome guest. When Italy is free we will do that over; but we must get you free first. Francois, I am now within five miles of you."

The man on his knees by the prison bed gasped; the letters staggered before his eyes.

"I am living on a ship, and I will explain how I got it when I see you. A few days now, Francois. Every night for a week, beginning with tonight there will be a person watching for you in Riders' Hollow, whom you might call 'The Hawk.' After that we shall get away for two weeks up as to avoid giving suspicion, and then repeat the arrangement again every night for a week. You do not know Riders' Hollow, and it is unnecessary to tell you more about it than that it is a lonely place hidden in trees, and supposed to be haunted by ghosts of men on horse back; the people about will not go there for love or money except by broad daylight."

MRS. CORA WILSON STEWART KENTUCKY'S FOREMOST WOMAN.

The Maysville Ledger thinks it was an insult to offer such a woman as Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart the position of "assistant matron of the Kentucky Reform School." Hardly so strong as that, because the intention was good. But what do you suppose Mrs. Stewart would want with such a job? The politicians proceeded on the pretty well established theory, we suppose, that every man and every woman in Kentucky is a candidate for something or other, it matters not much what.—Cynthiana Democrat.

THE MAKING OF GOOD MEN OUT OF BOYS.

Fast flying locomotives, swift sailing ships, submarine cables, wireless telegraphy and the telephone—these are some of the agencies that have made next door neighbors of persons whose distance from each other might be measured in hundreds and thousands of miles. With our telescopes we spy upon the movements of the planets, and through glass floored ships we pry upon the daily lives of the creatures of the deep sea. We spend fortunes to equip men for polar explorations, and they leave their frozen corpses on the snows of ages. For the understanding of adult life of today, we spend much time and money in research. For the shaping of the adult life of tomorrow, we have yet to learn to give except grudgingly. A few organizations and a few individuals have undertaken the study of the conditions which surround and therefore determine the growth of the young child; but a majority of us are slow to build school houses, and even yet slower to acknowledge that there may be a better way than the way we were brought up. Perhaps the fact that few of us shall live to see the fruit of our labors has something to do with it. Be that as it may, our persistent ignoring of the rights of the child is not short of criminal.—Southern School Journal.

The trade school has pointed out one important phase of education; namely, the fact that failure in one subject does not debar a student from all human rights, as seems to be the attitude of many schools and colleges. The trade-school boy may be an excellent mechanic so far as the handling of tools goes, he may be able to do very accurate work or to handle any machine in the shop, and yet seem incapable of learning even the simplest application of an algebraic formula.

A NOTABLE JUBILEE.

The Knights of Pythias, as an organization, has just celebrated its golden jubilee. Chief interest centered in the celebration at Washington City, where representatives of all States gathered last week. The occasion was one of dignity and national importance. Throughout the country the local lodges have celebrated, or will yet celebrate, the event in their own way. The organization was founded fifty years ago and it has a most commendable record to look back over. There is no radical feature about the organization. The story of Damon and Pythias is usually given as its simple and yet sublime cornerstone philosophy. It were better to say charity, for there is little of philosophizing about the order or its ritual. It devotes itself with all its gentle influences to good deeds and good words. It makes no pretense at an exalted creed except that in the immortality of the soul. It teaches that there is nothing more kindly than kindness, nothing more royal than truth. Its teachings are gentle and humanizing. Its methods are civil and peaceful. Its knighthood is more in the tip of the hat or the amiable salute rather than the thrust of the sword. For the past half century the order has been growing gradually but surely and doing good always. It has excited no enmities, but rather allayed some. It is constantly spreading a good influence among young men and that is a starting point at which good never stops.—Owensboro Messenger.

THE DEADLY NEW POISON.

Recently at a place which is famous for its aerodrome a youthful wag was watching with interest some wonderful contests in the air. Just when excitement was at its height the wag started up a rambling conversation with those immediately round him.
 "That's a terrible poison that's just been discovered," he remarked amiably to no one in particular.
 "What's it called?" inquired an elderly gentleman beside him.
 "Why, aeroplane poison, of course!" came the curt reply.
 "Is it deadly?" asked the e. g.
 "I should say so!" jerked out the juvenile wag, in his most knotty style.
 "And how much would kill a person?" went on the questioning one.
 "Oh, one drop!" came the retort.

THE WORK OF MISSIONS

In Africa—Money Is Needed—Next Sunday Is Mission Sunday at The Christian Church.

A recent picture of the heathen sub-chiefs was taken by Christian Church Missionaries at their station in the heart of heathendom. The crude customs and practices of these people make their condition pitiable. However, a marvelous work is being done among these tribes. During the past year fully one thousand more of them proved themselves genuine converts to Christianity. Bible schools attended by from five hundred to over a thousand are held each week in the midst of the half dressed natives. Day schools and the work of the medical missionary are great aids in reaching these people with the Gospel. The Christian Churches of Mason County will take an offering for missions on the first Sunday in March to aid in supporting just such successful missionary work which the Foreign Christian Missionary Society of these churches is doing.

Important to All Women Readers of This Paper

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it. Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased. You may suffer a great deal with pain in the back, bearing-down feelings, headache and loss of ambition. Your cough makes you nervous, irritable and may be dependent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kinner's Swamp Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions. A good kidney medicine, possessing real healing and curative value, should be a blessing to thousands of nervous, over-worked women. Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy will do for them. Every reader of this paper, who has not already tried it, by enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kinner & Co., Bismarck, N. Y., may receive sample $1.00 bottle by Parcel Post. You can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at all drug stores.

T-HOUR LAW IN EFFECT

Washington.—The new model eight-hour law for women workers in the national capital went into operation with hundreds and many other service establishments threatening increases in charges to the public and moderate priced restaurants preparing to replace their girl waiters with men. Department stores prepared to comply with its terms by lengthening the lunch hour and 5 o'clock closing.

The law provides that no woman under eighteen years old shall be employed before 7 o'clock a. m., or after 6 o'clock p. m.

Government clerks and a few other classes of women workers do not come within its prohibitions, which cover principally manufacturing, mercantile and mechanical establishments, laundries, hotels, restaurants and transportation offices.

SUNDAY CAFES

In Lexington May Be Closed.—New Ordinance Is Discussed.

Lexington.—The City Commissioners, in Committee of the whole, discussed, section by section, the proposed new ordinance for the licensing and regulation of saloons.

The Commissioners seem to agree upon all features of the ordinance except that requiring cafes and groceries connected with saloons to remain closed all day Sunday, the same as is required of other saloons.

YUBAN COFFEE

The Private Coffee of the Greatest Coffee Merchants Now Offered the Public.

Yuban is the Coffee which, for years, was selected by members of the firm of Arbuckle Bros., for their personal and gift use. At Christmas, with all the coffees of the world from which to choose, this coffee was always the one sent out to business associates and friends. It produces the choicest, most delicious cup of coffee that can be secured, regardless of cost. It has been so enjoyed for its distinctive character, its fine flavor and rich, aromatic fragrance, that it will no longer be confined to private distribution, but is now offered through grocers, only in this sealed package.

MANY JAPANESE ARE SUFFERING
Washington.—The State Department has received an appeal from the famine Relief Society, composed of religious workers at Hachinohe, Aomori-ken, Japan, asking that publicity be given to the critical condition existing in northern Japan.

making a living. The Red Cross has already sent $10,000 to famine and earthquake sufferers in Japan to be expended through a special Japanese committee organized to carry on relief work among the victims of both calamities.

Every man straightens up his shoulders in a dozen times a day, fearing he is becoming stoop-shouldered. Seven tenths of the men who work for wages, and all the women, believe they are abused by their employers.

We Promise You Relief from All Stomach Troubles Or Your Money Back
We honestly believe we have the best remedy in the world for indigestion and dyspepsia. We urge you to try it at our risk. If it doesn't relieve you—as we feel sure it will—we'll give back your money without a word. You know us—your family druggist. You know we wouldn't dare recommend anything we didn't know about, nor dare to break a promise. Therefore, when we recommend any remedy it is because we believe it to be better than any other to relieve the ailment for which it is made, and when we prove our faith in it and our sincerity toward you by promising to give back your money if it doesn't relieve you and in every way satisfy you, you have no possible excuse for doubt or hesitation.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are, we honestly believe, the best remedy made for Indigestion, Dyspepsia and all other Stomach Ills

We Know They're Good Delays Are Dangerous You Risk No Money

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, in addition to other ingredients, contain Pepsin and Malt, two great digestive aids used by the entire medical profession. They soothe the inflamed stomach, check the heartburn and distress, stimulate a healthy secretion of the gastric juice, aid in rapid and comfortable digestion of the food and help to quickly convert it into rich red blood, and thereby into flesh, bone and muscle. They relieve stomach distress promptly, and used regularly for a short time, tend to restore the stomach to a comfortable, easy-acting, healthy state. They aid greatly to promote regular bowel action.

Don't neglect indigestion, for it frequently leads to all sorts of ills and complications. The pain and discomfort is not the most unfortunate part. The fact that when the stomach is not acting right, the material needed to repair the wastes that are constantly taking place in the body is not being given to the blood either in the proper condition or fast enough is far more serious. Nothing will cause more trouble than an unhealthy stomach. The blues, debility, lack of strength and energy, constipation, biliousness, headaches and scores of other serious ailments result from the failure of the stomach to properly do its work.

Our willingness to have you use Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets entirely at our risk proves our faith in them. We always sell them this way, and it is because we know that they have greatly benefited scores of sufferers to whom we have sold them. There's no red tape about our guarantee. It means just what it says. We'll ask you no questions. You needn't sign anything. Your word is enough for us. We know that when they help you you will consider it money well spent even if they had cost you ten times as much. If they don't help you, the money you paid for them is yours, and we want you to have it.

Sold only at the more than 7,000 Rexall Stores—the World's Greatest Drug Stores. In convenient boxes—three sizes: 25c, 50c, $1.00

INSURANCE TRUST NOT PLEASED.

Frankfort, Ky., February 26.—The National Board of Fire Underwriters, headquarters in New York, through its Committee on Laws, has declined to accept the compromise proposal made by Senator Seldon R. Glenn and Chairman Ruby LaFoon of the State Rating Board, to be substituted for the provisions of the Glenn insurance bill, now before the General Assembly and which has been found so distasteful to the fire underwriters doing business in Kentucky that nearly all companies now commissioned here have resolved to withdraw from the Commonwealth.

SAVED THEIR LIVES

By Deciding Not to Ride in The Ripley Transfer Wagon In Which Two Men Were Killed at South Ripley.

The terrible accident at South Ripley yesterday morning, an account of which appeared exclusively in The Public Ledger 2 hours before any other newspaper in the United States published it, was the sad topic discussed for many hours.

The Ripley transfer omnibus, en route to the C. & O.'s depot at South Ripley was struck by Fast Flyer No. 5, about 7:30 o'clock and its only passenger, Mr. Samuel White, formerly bookkeeper in the Citizens' National Bank of Ripley, and since the leading insurance agent at Ripley, was instantly killed, the driver, Alonzo Williams, 25, also killed, the bus smashed into kindling and the two horses also killed.

No. 5 was over an hour late and had a clear block at the South Ripley station, the engineer opening the throttle to make up time into Cincinnati.

Williams, the driver of the bus saw the train too late, but could make no attempt to escape. Mr. White tried to get out of the vehicle, but the flying monster hit the entire outfit destroying it and occupants and killing the horses.

The accident was witnessed by a score of people and several made attempts to prevent Williams from driving over the crossing, but the noise prevented.

The sudden halting of the train and the sound of the crash frightened the passengers. The dead men were removed to their homes.

Woman Saves Her Life By Sticking To Husband.

Mr. and Mrs. Dietric, who gave an entertainment at Ripley Wednesday night were saved from taking their last ride to death in a most providential manner. They both started to get into the bus on the ferryboat, but Mr. Dietric told his wife to get in and ride up to the depot and he would walk. She said no that she would remain with him and walk, thereby saving her life. Another co-incidence is that the late Mr. H. Armstrong, of Ripley, whom Mr. Dietric succeeded in business, lost his years ago by falling off the ferryboat and drowning, while

MACON, GA., CHILD

Made Strong and Well By Vinol.

When we tell you that Vinol is the best remedy in our whole stock for making weak, puny, ailing children strong, robust and rosy we are only telling you what has been proved by hundreds of mothers.

J. L. Fickling, Macon, Ga., says:—"My child was very thin and delicate, no appetite, nervous, and did not sleep well. Doctors did not help her. Vinol was recommended and the change after a fair trial was wonderful. She sleeps soundly all night, has a splendid appetite and has gained in weight. I wish every mother knew what Vinol will do for delicate children."

What Vinol did for this little girl it will do for every weak and ailing child because sickly children need the strengthening cod liver elements and the tonic iron that Vinol contains—that is why Vinol builds them up quickly and gives them a fine, healthy color. It is pleasant to take and we guarantee that the results will satisfy you—money back if they do not. J. C. Pecor, Drugist, Maysville, Ky.

GOT IN WRONG HOUSE.

(Flemingsburg Times-Democrat.)
One night the past week a young traveling man from Carlisle and a young pedagogue of this city had an engagement to call on a couple of young ladies to escort them to an entertainment of some sort. By mistake they got into the wrong house and were ushered into a room occupied by two widow ladies of mature age. After carrying on a conversation for some time on the weather and other topics for a few minutes, one of the young men ventured to ask if the young ladies were at home. The lady of the house was a little hard of hearing and it was some time before she could catch the drift of their question, when she told them there were no young ladies there and that they had evidently come to the wrong house. But if you want full particulars call on Frank Matthias or Prof. Arnold, who can tell the whole story.

CONCRETE ROAD BUILDING

Policy Outlined By a National Conference at Chicago.

At its meeting last week at Chicago, the first National Conference in Concrete Road Building adopted the following principles as representing good practice in the construction of concrete roads:

1. The aggregate should be clean and hard.
 2. The sand should be coarse and well graded.
 3. A rich mixture should be used.
 4. The materials should be correctly proportioned.
 5. The materials should be thoroughly mixed.
 6. The inspection should be intelligent and thorough.
 7. When in doubt, reinforce the pavement.
 8. The subgrade should be of uniform density, thoroughly compacted and drenched with water immediately before placing concrete.
 9. The concrete should be of a viscom plastic consistency.
 10. After placing, the concrete should be immediately covered and kept moist and not opened to traffic for four weeks.
- Concrete is a building material of great value in the economical construction of highways, buildings, bridges and other structures; its rapidly increasing use is of great importance in the permanent developments in each State, and the quality of the sand, gravel and stone available in the various localities in each State are of fundamental importance, and have not yet been extensively determined. It, therefore, resolved that it is highly desirable that the materials available in the various States for use in concrete should be examined and tested as rapidly as possible by competent State geologists, universities or engineering experiment stations, and that the Governor and the Legislature of the several States be asked to seriously consider the great necessity for making adequate provision and appropriation to the proper agency for the prompt inauguration of such investigations.

Farmer's

Have you ever tried our way of borrowing money to pay for a farm?

You, of course, know that most farms are sold for one-third cash and the balance of the payment is represented by lien notes due in one and two years. You also know that there are times when it is impossible to pay these notes when they become due.

Our specialty is lending money on good farms for LONG PERIODS. Would you rather have five years to pay the balance than two years? Any one expecting to buy farms this March will do well to come in and consult us about getting the money.

We have been giving satisfactory service for 24 years.

ELECTRIC SIGNS!

The distinguishing air of quality which a first-class Electric Sign gives to a store is the element which gives a sign its greatest value as an advertising medium and investment. The impression it makes is good. It blazes forth to the public that there is business enterprise, merchandise and methods up-to-date. It affects the entire atmosphere of the business district. The stranger says, "It is a live town," and publishes it abroad.

It is the Sign of the Times.

MAYSVILLE GAS CO.

We Are Now Ready to Give You Our Service!

To us service means this: To sell only the best merchandise to be had; to give what you want when you want it; to gladly refund your money if we fail to satisfy you. Try a Hart, Schaffner & Marx Suit and Overcoat for the price you usually pay for the inferior kind. Our stock of Shoes, Hats, Shirts and all the little accessories are selected with great care. Come in and test us out; it's worth while.
